RAIDS AT SALOON AND RESTAURANT

Raids by the police Saturday and Sunday produced two cases which will appear before the police court this (Monday) morning on liquor charges.

About 3:15 Saturday afternoon Officers Charles Smith, Barney Keenan, Daniel O'Neil and Elmer Allen were sent by Chief George Linton to search the saloon of James O. Mahoney at 7 Falls avenue.

The arrival of the police in front of the place quickly attracted a crowd of several hundred who stood in the street and waited to see the result. These came when the police reached the cellar, where they found and seized a five gallon jug and 18 bottles said to contain intoxicating liquor, which Mr. Mahoney is accused of keeping with intent to sell.

The liquor was brought to police headquarters and Mr. Mahoney gave bonds for his appearance in court.

Sunday afternoon about 6 o'clock, following the arrest by Officer O'Neil of a man on the West Side accused of intoxication, Capt. D. J. Twomey sent Officers Smith, Keenan, O'Neil and Daniel Dombrak to raid the restaurant of Paul Skinger at 13 Thame street.

The front door was found locked when the police party arrived, but they got in and found eight or nine men inside. No liquor was found, but two of the men were declared to be so much under the influence of liquor that they were arrested on the charge of intoxication and Skinger on the charge of keeping a disorderly house. According to the police, a number of whisky cups turned up along with whisky glasses under them were found in the place.

Skinger gave bail for his appearance in court. He claimed that he had not locked the door to keep the police out but that some of the men in the crowd must have slipped the bolt in the door. The two men arrested were John Cosmo, 46, and Peter Hackett, 56, the latter a resident of Providence and a weaver.

In connection with the raid on the restaurant the police searched a house almost across the street from it, where it was supposed whisky might be kept. That was finding its way to the restaurant patrons.

A raid made late Saturday night on the grocery store of Paul Bannat at 149 Sachem street on suspicion that he had liquor in the place did not disclose any.

"WAY DOWN EAST" IN MOVIES AT THE DAVIS

An audience of several hundred were taken back to childhood days, the days of maple sugar, candy pulls, sleighing parties and barn dances when they witnessed the production of that old masterpiece of New England rural life "Way Down East," a simple story of plain New England folk, from the pen of Lotie Blair, of Eastport, Me., the story of the Davis family on Sunday evening.

D. W. Griffith, the producer of this super-production, has spared no expense in giving to the public the true settings of the scenes. The scenery is so realistic that the audience is taken back to the life of the New England summers are all taken in New England, and the scenes are so realistic that the audience is taken back to the life of the New England summers are all taken in New England, and the scenes are so realistic that the audience is taken back to the life of the New England summers are all taken in New England.

The mammoth dramatic scene, the rescue from the floating log, is taken in New England, and the scenes are so realistic that the audience is taken back to the life of the New England summers are all taken in New England, and the scenes are so realistic that the audience is taken back to the life of the New England summers are all taken in New England.

The photography of the picture is wonderful and the effects that go with the picture are very realistic. The Elizabeth scene is a wonderful piece of winter photography as is the scene of the dance. It is also a nice piece of winter photography as is the scene of the dance. It is also a nice piece of winter photography as is the scene of the dance.

Without doubt this is one of the most stupendous pictures from a standpoint of motion picture work that has ever been shown in this city. Every scene is a masterpiece of photography and nothing is overlooked that will add to the effect desired.

Accompanying the picture is a ten piece orchestra and the music played weaves into the picture with a charm that lends much to the production.

Reports that were current in the city Saturday morning, the cause of death were not substantiated by the investigation of Dr. C. C. Gunderslee, medical examiner, who said Sunday that the death followed an attack of acute indigestion.

Mr. McCahill was born in this city the son of Mary and the late Francis McCahill, and all his life was spent here. He learned the trade of a moulder and worked in all the foundries in the city.

NEW AUTO FEES WILL BE DOUBLED IN SOME CASES

Registration fees proposed by Automobile Commissioner R. B. Stockel, which he believes will be on a more equitable basis than the present system of computation, will, if approved by the legislature, be more than double the present rate, in some instances.

In every instance, the cost of registration will be more than now, but in comparison with the rates found in other states more equitably distributed, it is claimed.

The formula for the new rate is: Base fee, multiplied by 1854, multiplied by the number of cylinders. By multiplying by 10 cents the registration fee may be determined.

Automobile owners will be interested to know the proposed new rates and a partial list of the various makes of automobiles are herewith given:

Fee Rates Compared.
